Such a district typically has an annual budget of around $1.8 million, and therefore would have a reserve cap of $180,000. If this district were required to educate even one additional student with particularly severe disabilities—costs of which can exceed $75,000 per year—its reserves could be depleted very quickly. Districts confronting unexpected costs with low reserve levels face difficult choices, such as making sharp budget reductions or requesting emergency loans from the state.
