It's easy to search Wikibooks by topic, and there are separate sections for recipes and childrens' textbooks. You can download any page as a PDF using a link provided in the left-hand menu, but unfortunately there's no support for other formats. There's also Collection Creator - a handy tool that lets you collate several pages, organize them, and export them together (again, in PDF format). It's a nice feature that enables you to customize your reading material, but it's a bit of a hassle, and is really designed for readers who want printouts. The easiest way to read Wikibooks is simply to open them in your web browser.

The Autumn Of The Middle

The Autumn of the Middle Ages is Johan Huizinga's classic portrait of life, thought, and art in fourteenth- and fifteenth-century France and the Netherlands. Few who have read this book in English realize that The Waning of the Middle Ages, the only previous translation, is vastly different from the original Dutch, and incompatible with all other European-language translations.

The Autumn of the Middle Ages, by Johan Huizinga

Johan Huizinga's vision of Franco-Burgundian culture in The Autumn of the Middle Ages is typically summarized as follows: all cultural forms, be they chivalric, religious or artistic, lie under a pall of autumnal decline, where they have overripened or run to seed. A wild growth of chivalric games contrasts with empty display, emotional hysteria with hollow formality, strained symbolism with ...

A more familiar figure for most students, when they think of the Middle Ages, will be Chaucer's Knight, who has also (although for different motives than the Wife's) traveled widely in Europe and the Holy Lands. He is a noble, romantic, and dignified figure, yet also vaguely sad, with an air of nostalgia about him, reminding us that, by Chaucer ...

Autumn provides an insight into the life and times of the middle ages, leading into the Renaissance. The content is interesting, but the presentation is very dense and hotch-potch. The chapters are delineated around a theme, but within the chapters the ideas are not structurally tied in a tangible sequence.

The Mid-Autumn Festival is a harvest festival celebrated notably by the Chinese and Vietnamese people. It's also related to Chuseok and Tsukimi. The festival is held on the 15th day of the 8th month of the lunar calendar with a full moon at night, corresponding to mid September to early October of the Gregorian calendar. Mooncakes, a rich pastry typically filled with sweet-bean or lotus-seed paste, are traditionally eaten during the festival.
